Federal Ombudsman constitutes committee to solve problems of pensioners

ISLAMABAD: The Federal Ombudsman Ejaz Ahmad Qureshi on Thursday took cognizance of complaints against delay in disbursement of Pension by AGPR by different ministries, constituted a monitoring committee under the headship of Muhammad Ayub Tarin, Senior Advisor and former Additional Auditor General to evaluate the implementation status of pension reforms and to figure out as to how the pension payment process could be further simplified to facilitate pensioners.

According to the press release, the committee summoned the AGPR, Ministry of Finance, Ministry of Railways, Ministry of National Health Services, Federal Directorate of Education and Association for the Welfare of Retired Persons (AWRP) for this purpose. Mr. Tarin said that the pensioner along with their family members are still facing great financial difficulties due to delay in finalization of pension cases.

The representative of AGPR informed that although under the directions of WMS, Pension Cells have already been established in all Ministries and Divisions but still lapses were noted in submission of pension cases. However, in family pension cases, payment of pension is delayed due to some legal issues i.e. declaration of legal heirs, non-availability of bank account of the widow and eligibility of family members.

The AGPR assured to finalize the pension cases within 30 days from the day of submission of documents. The AGPR further informed that they have started automation of service statements/service books which are on the SAP system and it would facilitate early finalization of the pension claims. The Ministry of Health Services informed that no case of pension is pending with them. The Ministry of Railways informed that they are facing serious financial problems in disbursement of pension to its employees and have requested the government for provision of Rs. 9.8 billion for this purpose and soon as the funds received, all dues of pensioners would be cleared.

UK Tory MPs hold Boris Johnson's political fate in their hands

LONDON: Boris Johnson has survived the initial fallout from becoming the first British prime minister to be fined for breaking the law, but his long-term position remains precarious, analysts said.

The embattled UK leader offered a "full apology" Tuesday after being penalised for breaching Covid lockdown laws by attending a brief celebration of his birthday in 2020, but defied calls to resign. However, the so-called "partygate" scandal shows little sign of abating. Johnson faces further possible fines as police continue their probe into numerous rules-breaching events in Downing Street, while his ruling Conservatives look set to be punished in local elections next month. And once police have concluded their investigation, a senior civil servant's detailed report on the scandal will be published in full, which seems likely to increase the political pressure. Once-mutinous Conservative MPs have in recent weeks rallied around their leader as the war in Ukraine and the growing cost-of-living crisis diverted attention away from the furore.

But commentators are questioning whether Johnson, 57, can maintain that support if he is repeatedly fined, his party fares poorly in the May 5 nationwide polls and further lurid details of parties emerge. "A lot more fines and a lot more headlines might change the view of more voters and that in turn might change the mind of Conservative MPs if they do very badly in the elections," Anand Menon, a politics professor at King's College London, told AFP. "He's clearly willing and able to brazen some things out in a way other, earlier prime ministers probably weren't... I don't think he's superhuman, though." Johnson's position was hanging by a thread earlier this year following a stream of controversies since last summer that culminated in "partygate" and an increasingly rebellious mood among his MPs. —AFP
